

Storytelling & Code

Storytelling Elements

Setting: Your setting is both the world and the specific area within that world in which your story takes place. The world is large, but a city, town, or dungeon can be its own setting.

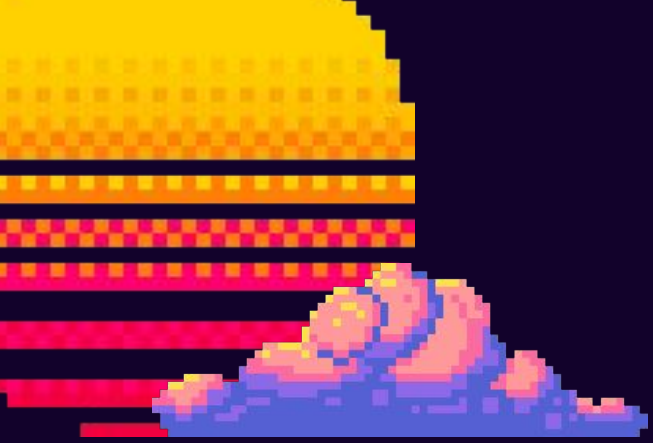

Storytelling Elements

Characters: People and other Non-Playable Characters (NPCs) that players can meet and speak to provide opportunities to speak directly to players. NPCs can help players complete their objective, get in the way, or provide context to the setting.

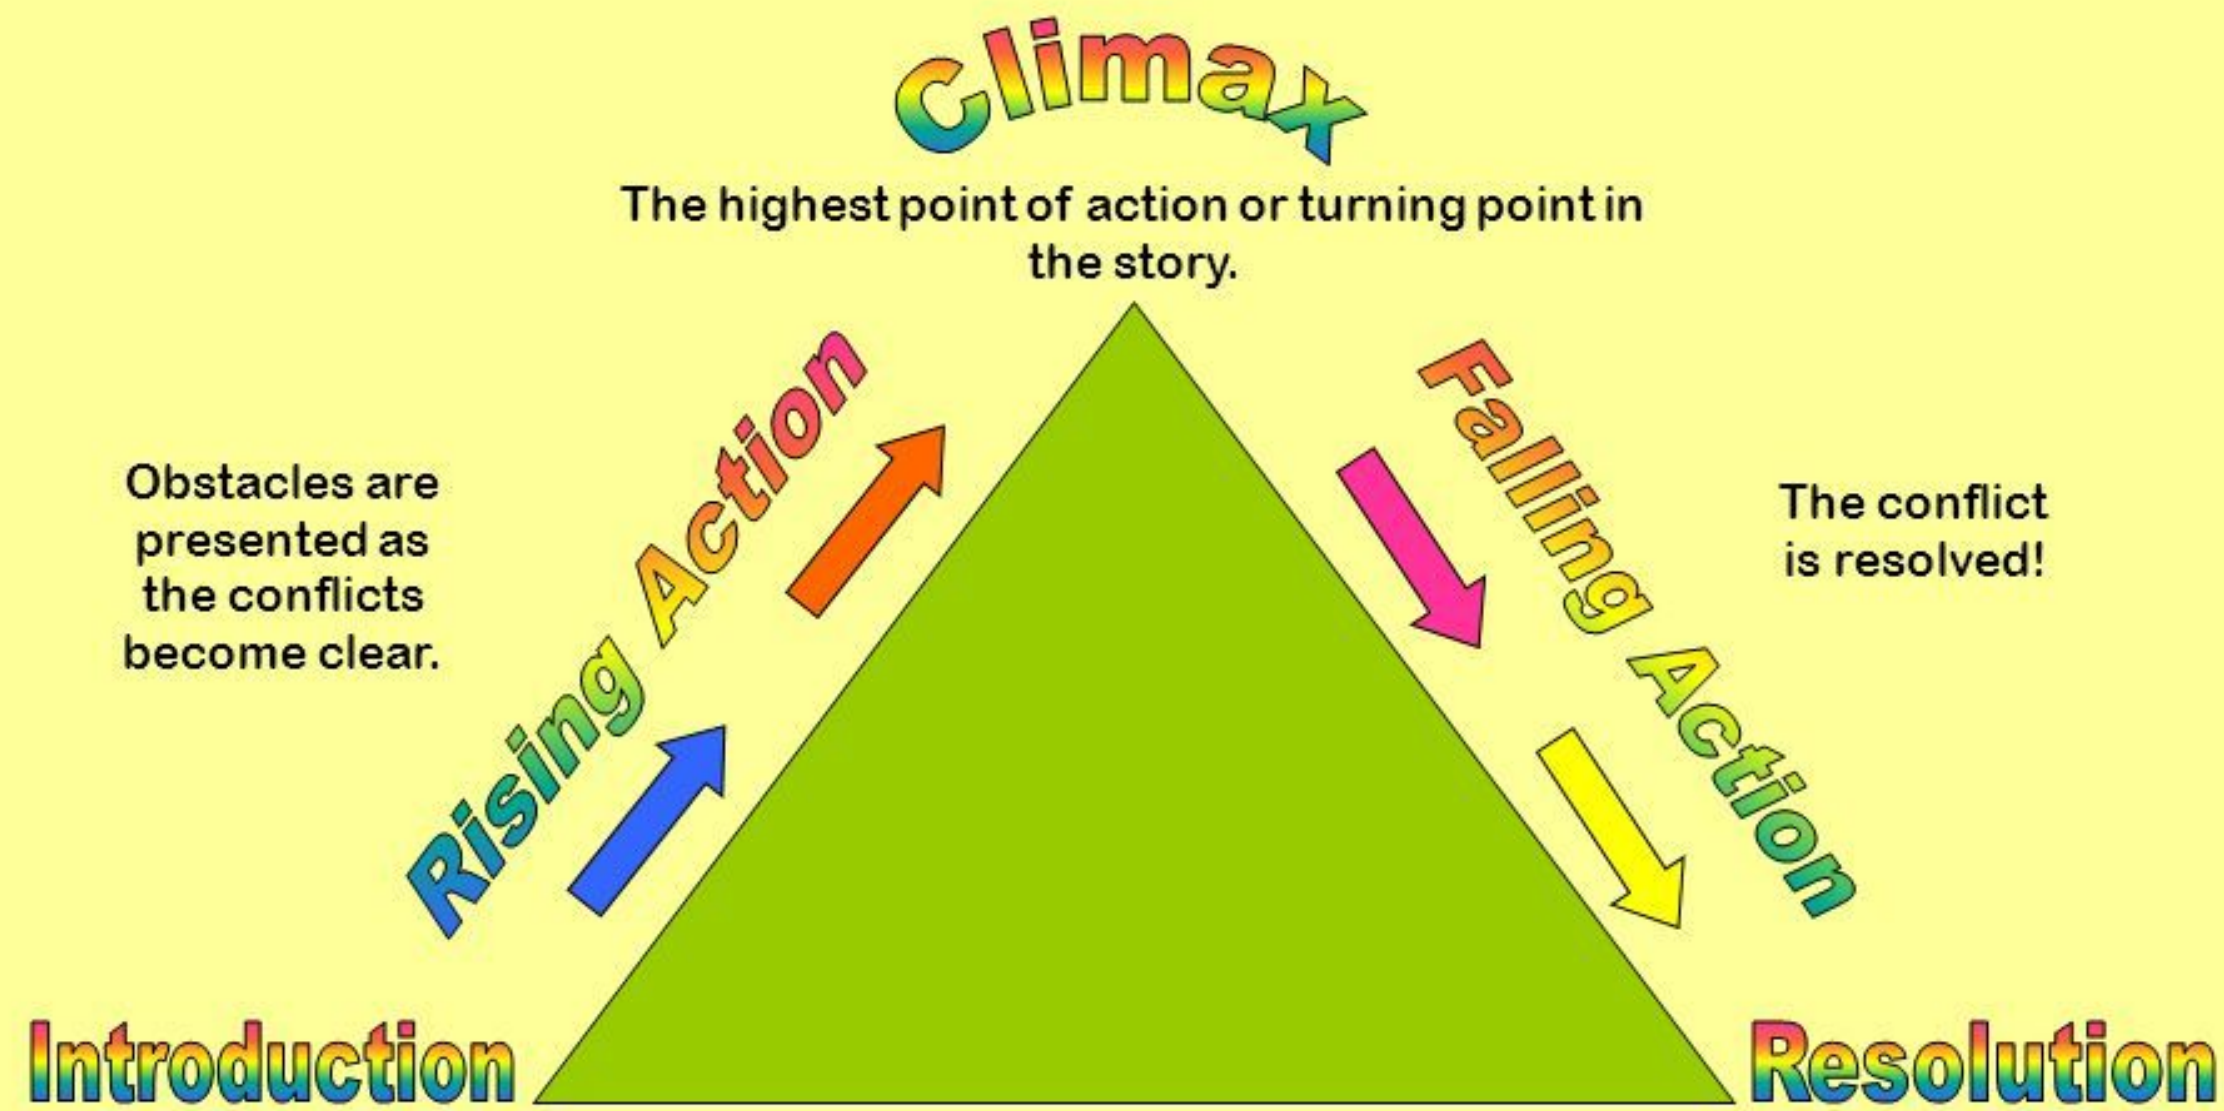

Storytelling Elements

Plot: This word describes the step-by-step series of story events that you play through. The Plot often provides a player with an objective, an incentive for completion, and places obstacles or challenges in the player's way.

← "The PLOT thickens..." →

The plot refers to a series of happenings in a literary work. The plot consists of an introduction, rising action, climax, falling action, and the resolution. A short story will always have rising action and a climax, but may not have a clear resolution.

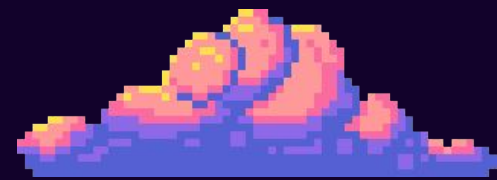

A pixel art illustration of a city skyline at night. On the left, there are three tall buildings with various patterns of yellow, green, and red pixels. A bridge with multiple arches spans the bottom of the image. On the right, there is another tall building with a grid of yellow and red pixels. The sky is dark blue with several white, pixelated clouds. The title 'Narrative in Games' is written in a white, monospace font in the upper right area.

Narrative in Games

- What is the goal of your game?
- What obstacles do I have to go through before I can reach that goal?

Mechanics, contd.

Mechanics are components of games that we, as players, interact with.

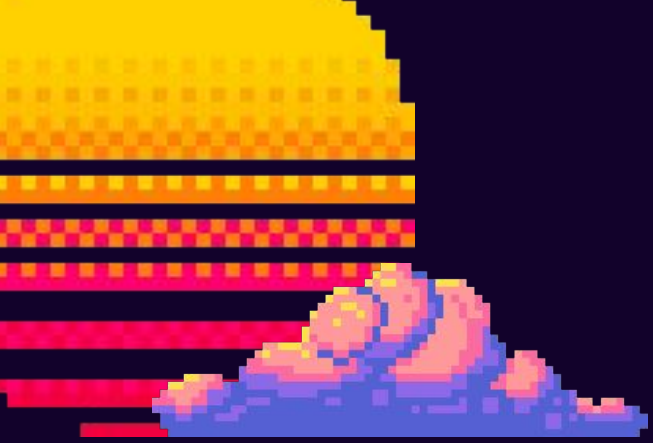

Designer Says

In groups of 2–3, there will be 1 Designer, and 1–2 Players. Designer will conduct a round of “Designer Says” to their Players, giving instructions that would move their story forward. This will imitate the mechanics that we as players interact with in our games. With the goal provided, show how to reach it within your groups.

Goal: Betsy must get to the bus stop.

Designer Says Reflection

- What are some fun or unique ways you tackled this problem?
- Do you feel like you have a better understanding of mechanics?
- If not, what can we clarify for you?
